One of these is a romantic drama in four acts, called "Christopher Columbus, or the Discovery of America." It is to be given its first presentation in this city next month at the Windsor theatre. this city next month at the Windsor theatre, with a strong caste and a number of novel mechanical effects. Fay Templeton's burlesque of "Hendrick Hudson," which is to be produced at the Four-senth-street theatre on August 18th, also has a Christopher Columbus among its features, while one of the leading characters in Edwin E. Rice's spectacular production of "The World's Fair" is a satire upon the great discoverer of America. Mr. Rice, by the way, has engaged H. L. Reid of the Globe theater, Boston, to design and paint several handsome new scenes for this production. handsome new scenes for this production as the leading feature of the play commence a week's engagement in Denver at the Tabor Grand to morrow night, and the following week appear at the theatre for three nights and Saturday matinee.

One of the leading Philadelphia papers in speaking of the production in that city says: "In dramatizing the narrative Mrs.
Abby Sage Richardson has made no import-Abby Sage Richardson has made no import ant departure from the author's text except to create the dramatic climaxes that are essential for stage use at the conclusion of each act. Otherwise she has employed the greater portion of his dialogue, and she has admirably preserved the romance of the book. It is not necessary here to rehearse the narrative, with which very few readers of current fiction are unfamiliar. Rather it is worth while to speak of the fine sentiment which prevades it, of the impressive work which is done by every member of the cast, and of the beautiful the inne sentiment which prevades it, of the innerestive work which is done by every member of the cast, and of the beautiful stage settings, which frame what is not unworthy of being styled a dramatic jewel. First of all, of course, is Eisie Leslie's representations of "Edward Tudor," "The Prince" and "Tom Canty," "The Pauper." It is a far more onerous and valuable performance than that of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," and it is beyond cavil the most serious and trying duty that any actress of her years has attempted. But she plays it with remarkable grace and force. The court language of the heir to the throne in the seventeenth century, and the queer idiom of the vagabond boy are spoken with equal intelligence and her acting of the contrasting characters is no less instinct with the elements of fidelity. Over and over again the audience was provoked to applause, notwithstanding that it was quite critical to let itself out until it had become convinced of the merit of the drama.

The equine paradox, or in other words, the exhibition of trained horses and dogs which appears for three nights at the theatre, commencing to-morrow night, is one of the best attractions of its kind now trav eling on the road. It is after the order of Bartholomew's great show, and is said to be really meritorious, and such a one as completely captivates and delights not only children but intelligent grown people.

The Odd Fellows society have an entertainment in the Salt Lake theatre Tuesday afternoon. It was the original intention to give a great panquet, but the time was too short in which to complete the necessary arrangements.

The San Francisco Music and Drama in a recent article, implies that owing to the recent burning of the Grand opera house in tals city, companies were compelled to cancel Salt Lake entirely. Such an implication is inexcusable, in view of the prompt an-nouncement of the arrangements effected by Mr. Burton, manager of the Salt Lake theatre, and Mr. Peter McCourt, of Den-ces, by which the theatre comes by ver, by which the theatre comes into the Silver Circuit and plays all attractions previously booked at the Grand, as well as all its own bookings. We venture the assertion that no company has been compelled or need be compelled to skip Salt Lake the coming season.
